How a diagnostic runs

The process is the same for all nine tests. What differs is what we ask the client and what comes out of it.

- 1 You issue an invitation. In the coach overview you pick the test, the language and the client's form of address. The app generates a link that you send to the client. The link leads straight into the questionnaire; the client creates no account and signs in nowhere.
- 2 The client fills the questionnaire in. Answers are saved on their device as they go, so they can take a break and come back later. They can switch language at any point while filling it in.
- 3 The link closes. An invitation is single use. Once submitted it stops working, so the same person cannot take the same test twice. An unused invitation is valid for 30 days.
- 4 The evaluation appears on your side. The client receives no results after submitting and never sees them. They open for you alone in the coach overview.
- 5 You deliver the reading. You can read the evaluation in the app or download it as a PDF. Every one ends with a summary written directly to the client, so you have text at hand that can be sent or read out loud in a session.

Only the coach sees results. This is not a setting that can be switched. The whole product rests on the reading reaching the client through a conversation with you, not as a file they open alone on the bus.

THREE LANGUAGES

Every test and every evaluation exists in Czech, Slovak and English. This is not a machine translation of the framing on top of Czech text: the questionnaires are written in full for each language, the reading included. You choose the language when issuing the invitation and the client can switch it while filling in. You can then view and download the evaluation in any of the three, regardless of which one the client answered in.

FORM OF ADDRESS

When issuing an invitation you set whether the client is a man or a woman. Czech and Slovak inflect for gender, so the whole evaluation is written accordingly. The English version has nothing of the sort to resolve.

AN UNFINISHED QUESTIONNAIRE

If the client does not submit the questionnaire in full, the evaluation is still assembled and carries a note at the top saying how many statements were left unanswered. Treat it as material for a conversation, not as a finished picture.

Which diagnostic to choose

The three families answer three different questions. They are not degrees of the same thing: the point is not which one goes deeper, but what you are asking.

Performance Diagnostic ELITE	How does their head work in performance today? At the start of the work, when you need a broad map and want to know what can be built on and what is holding things back.
Emotionally destructive patterns	What switches on in them under pressure, and where is it from? When a client keeps hitting the same wall even though they know exactly what they should do. A rational solution does not work there.
Archetypes	What kind of person is this and how do they come across? When you are working on a role in the team, communication, leadership, personal brand, or why they do not get on with someone.

QUICK DECISIONS

The client is an athlete.	Pick the sport variant in all three families. It is not a reworded business version: it asks about the dressing room, the coach, the line-up and the race, that is, situations the client actually knows.
The client is a manager or an entrepreneur, or this is about personal life.	Pick Business & Life, Brand Archetypes among the archetypes, and the general variant among the patterns.
An athlete from a team sport.	Choose Team sport among the patterns. It deals with a place in the line-up, the dressing room and measuring yourself against team mates.
An athlete from an individual sport.	Choose Individual sport among the patterns. It deals with solitude in training, the relationship with the coach, and the fact that nobody else stands behind the result.
Little time, or you want to measure repeatedly.	Take ELITE 100 instead of ELITE 200. It covers the same seven areas, only without the finer breakdown inside them.
Long-term work, and you want to do it properly.	Start with ELITE 200. Add patterns or archetypes afterwards, depending on what the profile runs into.

The families do not exclude one another and can be combined. The usual pair is ELITE as the map and patterns as the explanation of why something on that map keeps refusing to move.

Performance Diagnostic ELITE

A broad map of performance psychology. It shows what you can build on with a client, what holds them back and where the next step lies. Four tests: two lengths, two settings.

THE SEVEN AREAS ELITE LOOKS AT

A	Identity and inner motivation	They know who they are and why they do it. Does their worth rest on results, or on something firmer?
B	Confidence and inner dialogue	How they talk to themselves, above all after making a mistake.
C	Concentration and attention control	Do they hold attention where it belongs, and bring it back when they lose it?
D	Emotion regulation and performance under pressure	What pressure does to them and whether they can handle it.
E	Resilience and growth mindset	How they process setbacks and feedback, and how long they last.
F	Discipline, habits and recovery	Sleep, energy, consistency. Whether they look after themselves or merely endure.
G	Relationships, communication and environment	Boundaries, the support around them, the safety to say out loud what they think.

Sport and Business & Life look at the same seven areas. They differ in the situations they ask about and the language they use to read them.

01 Performance Diagnostic ELITE 200™

Sport variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Athletes, in-depth entry diagnostic

LENGTH

200 statements · 45–60 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

The most detailed thing we have. Reach for it when the work is beginning and is meant to last months: you want the whole picture and one solid baseline to come back to. Inside each of the seven areas it distinguishes three narrower themes, so it does not merely say “concentration is slipping” but shows whether the trouble is outside distraction, getting attention back after a mistake, or the client living in the result instead of the process.

02 Performance Diagnostic ELITE 200™ · Business & Life

Business and life variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Managers, entrepreneurs, personal development

LENGTH

200 statements · 45–60 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

The same for someone whose playing field is the meeting, the negotiation and the family. It asks about decisions under pressure, energy across the week, boundaries at work, and whether self-worth holds anywhere other than in the quarter's results.

03 Performance Diagnostic ELITE 100™

Sport variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Athletes, a faster entry or a repeat measurement

LENGTH

100 statements · 20–30 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

Half the length, the same seven areas. Suitable when the client does not have an hour, when you want a profile quickly before the first session, or when you are measuring again after some time and care about movement across whole areas. It does not break them into narrower themes, so it says where things are stuck, not quite so precisely why.

04 Performance Diagnostic ELITE 100™ · Business & Life

Business and life variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Managers, entrepreneurs, personal development

LENGTH

100 statements · 20–30 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

The shorter business version. It proves itself in companies where the diagnostic goes out to several people at once and a longer questionnaire would put some of them off.

What is in an ELITE evaluation

The same structure across all four tests. ELITE 200 goes deeper inside each area; otherwise you are reading the same thing.

- Profile at a glance. All seven areas side by side, so it is clear in one look where the person is at home and where not.
- Anchors of the profile. The strongest things they have. Material to work with, not just praise.
- Development priorities. Where the work is needed most and what happens once you start on it.
- Profile dimensions. A reading of each of the seven areas on its own: what it means, how it shows up in this client and how to handle it. ELITE 200 adds a breakdown into narrower themes inside each area.
- Development recommendations for 8 to 12 weeks. Concrete steps, not general advice. Usable as an outline for the coming sessions.
- Summary for the client. A closing written straight to them. This is the text you can hand over or read out.

Emotionally destructive patterns

Eleven patterns that switch on under pressure, usually beyond will and beyond reason. They explain why a client keeps doing the very thing they know is hurting them. Three tests, one per setting.

THE ELEVEN PATTERNS

01 Abandonment	Fear of loss and emotional instability
02 Mistrust	Vigilance, mistrust and the expectation of betrayal
03 Emotional deprivation	Emotional hunger and an unmet need for closeness
04 Social exclusion	A sense of difference and of being outside the group
05 Dependence	Uncertainty about independence and decision-making
06 Vulnerability	Catastrophising and the expectation of threat
07 Defectiveness	Shame, inner inadequacy and the fear of being found out
08 Failure	Expecting failure and distrusting your own performance
09 Subjugation	Compliance, self-suppression and lost boundaries
10 Unrelenting standards	Relentless demands, pressure and a performance identity
11 Entitlement / grandiosity	Entitlement, impulse and trouble with the limit

THE FIVE AREAS THE PATTERNS FALL INTO

Patterns do not stand alone. The evaluation groups them by what went unmet in the person, and then speaks about an area instead of three separate items.

Disconnection and rejection	What is missing safe and dependable closeness
Impaired autonomy and performance	What is missing support towards independence and trust in one's own powers
Impaired limits	What is missing kind but firm boundaries
Other-directedness	What is missing the right to have needs of one's own and to say them out loud
Overvigilance and inhibition	What is missing acceptance without conditions and without performance

In the sport variants the same areas are named in the language of the dressing room. Safety in relationships and acceptance, Independence and trust in one's own powers, Boundaries and self-control, Focus on others, Demands and control.

05 Emotionally destructive patterns

General variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Managers, entrepreneurs, personal life

LENGTH

110 statements · roughly 25 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

It asks about relationships, work and the self, without a sporting frame. Bring it in when a client keeps hitting the same wall in coaching: they know what to do, they can describe it, and still they do not do it. The patterns show what stands in the way and why it is not a question of will.

06 Emotionally destructive patterns · Individual sport

Sport variant, individual sports

WHO IT IS FOR

Athletics, tennis, swimming, riding, martial arts

LENGTH

110 statements · roughly 25 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

Its own questionnaire, not a reworded general version. It asks about solitude in training, the relationship with the coach, the fact that nobody else stands behind the result, and the head in the starting blocks. A pattern shows up differently in an individual athlete than in a dressing room and differently again than in an office, so the reading speaks about their situations too.

07 Emotionally destructive patterns · Team sport

Sport variant, team sports

WHO IT IS FOR

Football, ice hockey, basketball, volleyball and the like

LENGTH

110 statements · roughly 25 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

Also its own questionnaire. It turns around a place in the line-up, the dressing room, measuring yourself against team mates, a change of coach, and what it is like to sit on the bench. For a player whose performance breaks according to how they feel in the group.

What is in a patterns evaluation

The same structure across all three variants. What differs is the language of the reading and the situations it speaks about.

- Profile of all patterns. Eleven patterns side by side, from strongest to weakest.
- Load on the areas. Where it converges. Often easier to read than individual patterns, because it shows one need behind three expressions.
- The three strongest patterns with a reading. Three views of each: how it looks from inside, what it does under pressure, and where it came from.
- Situationally activated patterns. Patterns that do not stand out in the total, but where the client marked several statements very strongly. These are usually exactly the triggers that are worth talking about.
- How it works together. What the pair of strongest patterns does in combination. Two patterns side by side often behave differently than either one alone.
- Summary for the client. A closing written straight to them.

The result is not a diagnosis or a label. That is how it is put in the instructions the client sees before filling in, too. A high pattern does not say something is wrong; it says where the person is sensitive and what takes them over under pressure.

Archetypes

Twelve personality types in four motivational groups. They do not say how strong a person is, but what kind of person they are: what drives them, how they come across, and where they turn against themselves under pressure.

TWELVE ARCHETYPES IN FOUR GROUPS

Independence and fulfilment	Innocent · Explorer · Sage. to be your own person, understand the world and live by your own convictions
Risk and mastery	Hero · Outlaw · Magician. to achieve something, change the world and leave a mark
Belonging and enjoyment	Regular Guy / Regular Gal · Lover · Jester. to belong with people, care for them and enjoy their company
Stability and control	Caregiver · Creator · Ruler. to look after things, build them and keep them under control

In the sport variant the archetypes also carry a nickname from the world of sport. The joy of playing, The seeker, The strategist, The racer, The provocateur, The visionary, The grafter without an ego, The aesthete of movement, The dressing-room entertainer, The backbone of the team, The technician, The captain.

08 Brand Archetypes

Business variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Entrepreneurs, managers, people building a brand

LENGTH

96 statements · roughly 20 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

For work on role, leadership, communication and personal brand. It answers why one person follows them and another does not, what kind of leadership fits them, and what repels people without their having any idea. It also serves well where succession or the make-up of a leadership team is at stake: two Rulers side by side work differently than a Ruler with a Caregiver.

09 Athlete Archetypes

Sport variant

WHO IT IS FOR

Athletes, individual and team alike

LENGTH

96 statements · roughly 20 minutes

LANGUAGES

Czech, Slovak, English

WHAT IT IS FOR

Its own questionnaire, not a translated business one. The archetype is the same, but asking a company owner and an athlete in the same words does not work. Reach for it when you are working on a role in the team, the relationship with the coach, public presence, or why a player does not fit the role somebody put them in.

What is in an archetypes evaluation

The same structure in both variants. The sport one adds three parts about the team, the coach and how the athlete comes across in public.

- Profile of all twelve archetypes. The whole field side by side, so it is clear how pronounced the person is.
- Motivational map. The four groups and where the weight falls. Often says more than the single strongest type.
- Primary archetype. Who they mainly are. A detailed reading: the essence, how it shows in business or in sport, the shadow under pressure, the typical traps and what to do about it.
- Secondary archetype. The second colour that changes the primary type. The same Hero looks different with a Sage behind them than with a Jester.
- Suppressed archetype. What the person dislikes in themselves or will not allow. Usually the most valuable place in the whole evaluation.
- How they play together. The interplay of primary, secondary and suppressed. Not three descriptions side by side, but one reading of that particular combination.
- Summary for the client. A closing written straight to them.

WHAT THE SPORT VARIANT ADDS

- Role in the team and in individual training. Where this type sits in the line-up and where it will wear them down.
- Where it grates with the coach. Predictable points of friction and how to work around them.
- Personal brand and public communication. How to appear in public so that it fits who the person actually is.

An archetype is not a grade. None of the twelve is better. The evaluation therefore does not say which one to have, but what to do with the one the client has, and what the missing one is costing them.

Players Survey

A branch for whole squads. The player completes the survey and only they see their own results; the coach gets a profile of the whole team. It is the only place in the application where the respondent sees a result.

- What it is Players Survey is Performance Diagnostic ELITE 200, sport variant, under a different name. The word diagnostic is never used towards a player or a club coach; we speak of a survey and of a team profile.
- Who creates the team The master creates the team and assigns it to a particular external coach. That coach then issues player links within their own team, and nothing else. Other tests stay out of reach until the master grants full access.
- Players who completed it earlier A player who took the diagnostic as our own client does not take it again. The master adds their finished result to the team and it counts towards the profile. It never reaches the roster and the club coach never sees it: the client agreed to work with us, not with an outside club.
- Labels instead of names The coach chooses how players are labelled. It can be a name, it can be Player 1. Before submitting, a player may keep the label or write their own name instead. Either way we do not need to know who is behind it.
- The player's choice Before submitting, the player chooses whether to share their results with the coach. If they decline, the coach sees only that the survey is in. The answers count towards the team profile and the norms either way, anonymously.
- What the player gets Their own results immediately after submitting, downloadable as a PDF. It is the only place in the application where a respondent sees their own result.
- What the coach gets A six to eight page team profile: a summary, the seven areas with interpretation, structural findings, a twelve-week plan, questions for individual conversations and boundaries of use. No individual players.
- How a strong area is recognised Not by the average. An area counts as strong when at least six players in ten sit in the strong band of the test and almost nobody is falling behind. An average on its own can hide that half the squad is down there, so an area with a handsome number and two players in development priority is named as work, not as something to lean on. Sometimes an area with a lower number turns out to be the stronger one; that is because in that one the whole squad is together.
- Languages Czech and English only. Slovak is not offered in this branch.
- Small squads Below five completed surveys the profile comes close to an individual profile and can be read back to particular players. The report says so to the coach and explains how to handle it.

WHO SEES WHAT

- Player Their own results, always. Nothing else.
- Club coach Their own team's profile and the results players chose to share. No other teams.
- Our internal coach Nothing from the team branch.
- Master, someone else's team The team name and its profile. No individual results, not even shared ones.
- Master, own team When a master puts themselves in as the coach, they run the team: they send out the links and see the results players shared with them. Never the ones players kept private.

The club coach does not see this handbook and does not need it. Their interface is narrowed to one thing: issue a player link and read the team profile.

Practical notes

Small things worth knowing before you run into them with a client.

BEFORE YOU SEND THE INVITATION

- Check the variant. Sport or business, and for the patterns individual or team on top of that. The wrong variant only shows up in the answers, and the link cannot be used twice.
- Check the language and the form of address. The client can switch the language; the form of address they cannot. That one is yours to set.
- Tell the client how long it takes. ELITE 200 is close to an hour. Anyone who does not sit down for it properly will rush it.

WHAT TO TELL THE CLIENT BEFOREHAND

- To answer quickly and by what actually happens in them, not by the person they would like to be.
- Not to fill it in after an argument or an hour after a match. We want how it usually is, not how they feel right now.
- That you will see the results and go through them together. The client does not get them after submitting, and it is better they know that in advance than sit waiting.

WHEN SOMETHING GOES WRONG

- The link does not work. Either it has been used, or it has expired, or it was revoked. The client sees a message in their own language. Issue a new invitation.
- The client started the questionnaire and did not finish. Their part-written answers are stored on their device, so they can carry on at the same link in the same browser. On another device they start over.
- The invitation is for the wrong test. Revoke it before the client opens it and issue a new one.

HOW TO HANDLE AN EVALUATION

An evaluation is material for a conversation, not a verdict. The strongest part is usually the one the client does not expect: the suppressed archetype, the area where three patterns converge, or a development priority in an area they thought they had sorted. The closing summary is written so that it can be handed over unchanged.

A diagnostic does not determine what is wrong with a person. It shows where to push so that they move on.
